

School Safety

While hoping that campus violence never occurs at Suffolk County Community College, the possibility always exists. James Maher, Assistant Director of Public Safety, will conduct a short program that gives an overview of the recent school shooting incidents in the United States and what law enforcement has learned regarding the offenders who commit these acts. The program will provide some detail regarding the more well-known incidents as well as a brief description as to how police may respond to an actual incident at our college, should one occur.
